

An attorney-directed assistant that stays in touch with your client for the whole recovery, and keeps the record you'll need.

PIRRA is a disclosed AI assistant on your firm's number. It checks in with the client a few times a week, remembers what she told it, asks what's changed, and turns the months between intake and resolution into a faithful, source-linked recovery record. The complete record stays inside your firm. You decide what, if anything, becomes an exhibit.

1 · THE CLIENT

Consistent, personal contact by text

Disclosed as an AI, directed by your named attorney, on your number. It asks how she is right now, follows up on what she said last week, and gives her room to explain. No app. A person at the firm is one word away.

3 · THE FIRM

Confidential by design, released only on your decision

The assistant never discusses fault, never answers legal or case questions, never contacts anyone but the client. Nothing leaves the firm without the attorney's authorized decision. Supervision is built in, with a record to show for it.

ONE EXCHANGE, FROM A SYNTHETIC CASE

missed my daughter's recital. couldn't sit that long on those little chairs, stood in the back and then had to leave. cried in the car
MARIA · SAT 4:20 PM · LOG-0071

That sounds really disappointing, Maria. Do you want to tell me more about how the afternoon went?
PIRRA · 4:21 PM

it was 45 minutes. I lasted maybe 15 on the chair then stood in the back, then my back started spasming so I went to the car. she looked for me after. I'm a 6 right now and it's still spasming
MARIA · 4:29 PM · LOG-0073

· · · TWO DAYS LATER · · ·

You mentioned "couldn't sit that long" on Saturday. Since then — easier, harder, or about the same?
PIRRA · MON 9:19 AM · QUOTES HER OWN WORDS about the same. I stand at the counter to eat now

MARIA · 9:26 AM · LOG-0078

WHAT COUNSEL SAW

Monday's digest, on her phone: "Sat: missed daughter's recital, 'couldn't sit that long.' Back 6, spasming. Sitting 'about the same' since." Opening it logged her review. Nothing else was asked of her.

In the timeline, two entries she can trust:

T-30 · event: Sat, time not stated · reported 16:20 · missed recital; could not sit; left; "cried in the car" · source LOG-0071
T-31 · same event · reported 16:29 · ~15 min seated, spasm, left for car · "6 right now, still spasming" · source LOG-0073 · candidate pathway: present sensation (CA Evid. Code §1250), for counsel's review

In the exhibit, if counsel prepares one: the verbatim excerpt with its log reference and a point on the recovery curve. What did not happen: no question about the crash, no suggestion of what to report, no reading her scores back, no comment on her case.

WHY FIRMS ARE ASKING FOR THIS

Non-economic loss is often the largest and least-documented part of a recovery. Medical records show treatment, not the recital or the car seat. Clients rarely keep journals, and a self-kept diary is open to attack as curated. A record built with neutral questions, good days included, is harder to attack.

Opposing counsel now asks about AI in discovery. Federal courts split in 2026 on whether a litigant's AI conversations are protected; the case that lost involved a consumer tool with no attorney direction. PIRRA is attorney-directed from the first message and built to stand up if produced.

WHAT WE PROMISE, AND WHAT WE DON'T

We promise the product's behavior. Nothing leaves your firm without the attorney's authorized decision. The complete original record is always preserved. At the default setting the assistant composes nothing: it selects from questions you approved and may quote the client's own words back, verified against the log.

We do not promise legal outcomes. Privilege and work-product protection depend on the relationship and the circumstances, not on a permission setting. The architecture is designed to support them and is under review by California counsel. Which exhibits to prepare, and whether to produce any underlying record, are counsel's decisions, made with the waiver rules in mind.

Pilot. A small number of firms, synthetic cases first, then live cases under California counsel's review. Pilot firms get the case-setup wizard, the workbench, the exhibits and a direct line to the founders. Reply to this email to request a place or to see the thirty-day synthetic case end to end.

$149 PER CASE · FLAT
DECLINED CASES: NO CHARGE

The exchange above is from a synthetic case (client, firm, attorney and messages are invented). Not legal advice. PIRRA preserves evidence that would otherwise be lost; it does not create it. The assistant never pretends to be a person, never discusses fault, and never contacts anyone but the client. A separate comparison with other client-communication and case-management tools is available on request.
